ADVISORY - Thursday, October 20, 2016
(Washington) Today, Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, who is a Floridian, sent a message to Secretary of State John Kerry saying “We must do better” in helping to strengthen the relationship between the people of the United States and the people of Israel. In this message, she states: “I am writing to urge you to increase the level of American aid to Israel in areas where our two nations can do more for each other – just as Israel has a unique relationship with the United States. “The unbreakable bond between our two nations has never been closer.

In recent years, the United States has helped Israel defend itself, expand its economy and strengthen the bipartisan support for Israel in Congress. “I’m concerned that Israel’s economy has been growing more rapidly than that of its major allies such as the United States, Canada and the European Union. And

I’m wondering if the United States can more effectively support Israel than its closest allies. “The U.S.-Israel relationship is unique: We have been friends in arms for nearly 70 years. But while the United States has faced great challenges elsewhere, the relationship between Israel and the United States has never been stronger. We share similar values, a common interest in security and great respect for one another’s democracies. But because of the unique strength of the relationship, we must do better in helping to strengthen it. “In recent years, the United States has provided more than $10 billion in aid to Israel over the last five years. That represents Israel’s largest annual aid package from any country in the world – more than the United Kingdom, France, Japan and every other nation in the Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an information recording apparatus, and more particularly to an information recording apparatus which can record information on a tape-shaped recording medium in the state of a cartridge and is capable of recording information at a desired position of the medium. 2. Related Background Art Various types of information recording apparatuses for recording information on a tape-shaped recording medium have heretofore been developed and provided. The apparatuses are not only adapted to record information on a tape-shaped medium such as a magnetic tape but also adapted to record information on a disk-shaped medium such as a floppy disk or a hard disk. Such an information recording apparatus is provided with a drive device having an information recording unit such as a magnetic head, a record position detection unit for detecting the recording position of the information recording unit, and a control unit for controlling the drive device. The drive device and the control unit are incorporated in a casing, and the drive device is connected to a loading unit through a cable. The loading unit in turn receives information on a cartridge accommodating a tape-shaped recording medium from a cartridge drive provided separately of the loading unit. The cartridge drive receives information on a plurality of cartridges containing a plurality of tape-shaped recording media and recognizes the cartridges, from which information is to be recorded. The cartridge drive includes a plurality of devices such as a head cartridge, a cartridge holder, a shutter, and a linear motor. These devices are provided separately and connected through cables. With the conventional apparatus described above, the cartridge drive is a discrete component to be mounted separately of the loading unit, with resultant increase in size. As a result, the apparatus becomes large and the installation space is increased. Also, the connectors and cables of the loading unit and the cable of the cartridge drive must be arranged in the housing of the apparatus, and their arrangement is considerably limited. The structure of the cartridge drive in which the devices are provided separately and connected through cables requires an increased number of connectors and cables to connect the devices. This makes the cartridge drive more difficult to assemble in the apparatus. Also, the provision of the connector and cable arrangement occupies the maximum allowable space in the housing of the apparatus.
